

Easy data transfer at top speed

Sandberg is now launching a smart new solution that elegantly solves the problems associated with large file transfers between two computers. You can forget about overflowing USB keys, temporary network setups and hard disk installations. Sandberg's new USB to USB Transfer Link is connected between the USB ports of the two computers, allowing huge amounts of data to pass backwards and forwards at high speed. No software installation is required if you are running Windows® Vista.

Sandberg USB to USB Transfer Link is the easiest way to transfer files between two computers. The cable is designed for Windows® Vista's integrated transfer software, which is also on the CD provided so that you can install it in Windows® XP. The USB to USB Transfer Link is a special USB cable with a male connector at both ends to connect to a USB port on each computer. In the middle of the cable there is a stylish box containing all the necessary electronics. The transfer software makes it easy to select the files you want to move or copy. The cable is therefore ideal for transferring files from your old XP computer to your new one running Vista – and it all runs at USB 2.0 speed, which is faster than most traditional networks.

You are not restricted to using it with the same two computers all the time. You can take the cable and the transfer software with you and use it wherever you need to. USB to USB Transfer Link does have certain limitations compared to a real network. For example, you cannot connect to the Internet or play networked games etc. But for file management and data transfer between two computers, the USB to USB Transfer Link is a truly effective solution.

Works under the following:

- Windows XP
- Windows Vista
